TRAIL DESCRIPTIONS: Wellesley, incorporated in 1881 after two centuries being part of neighboring towns, developed as a deliberately planned town. Frederick Law Olmsted designed the railroad stations. Carefully laid out parks and preservation of open space were high priorities.

The walk route consists of four 5km loops beginning at the Wellesley Free Library. Three loops incorporate the Fuller Brook Trail, a popular public walking path along the quiet Fuller and Caroline Brooks; the fourth loop includes the equally enjoyable Crosstown Trail. All loops pass through residential and shopping/dining areas.

The western loop, only available when Wellesley College Campus is open to the public, follows a portion of the Boston Marathon route through the downtown, continues onto Wellesley College campus including a labyrinth and the Jewett Art Complex as well as other stunning brick and stone buildings, and circles back to the Start/Finish via the Fuller Brook Trail.

The eastern loop follows a portion of the Boston Marathon route for a short distance before continuing through a residential area, a few blocks of businesses, and then the Hunnewell Field Complex via the Fuller Brook Trail.

The northern loop goes through the center of town, follows the Crosstown Trail, continues into a residential area, then returns to Library through town.

The southern loop is mostly in residential neighborhoods, passes an independent boarding & day school for approximately 500 girls in grades 5-12, traverses part of the Fuller Brook Trail, and returns to the Library via a downtown area consisting of many small shops and eateries.

RATING: All loops are relatively flat with some unpaved surfaces, and have an AVA rating of 1B, suitable for strollers but not wheelchairs.

AWARD: This is an IVV Credit Only event; no award.
